

This project involved the refurbishment of the foyer of the Laws building for UCL, it included a new reception area and security barriers including security requirements such as alarms and cameras. A new heating system and plasma screens were also installed into the foyer.

A disabled ramp was installed to the exterior of the building and automatic doors and disabled adaptations including an induction loop and accessible gate were incorporated into the entrance area.

This was carried out in keeping with a building of historical interest within a conservation area, by the use of high quality materials and finishes which complemented the existing structure without making changes to the existing finishes.
